OKLAHOMA HAS A NUMBER OF EXCELLENT MUSEUMS DEDICATED TO THE MOTHER ROAD.

- National Route 66 Museum, Elk City. The National Route 66 Museum in Elk City's Ackley Park takes visitors on a virtual tour of the Mother Road. Along the way, visitors encounter colorful audio kiosks, murals, vignettes, and memorabilia celebrating the historic highway, including an old truck that recalls the Okies' flight from the Dust Bowl down Route 66 in the 1930s, as dramatized in Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath. elkcity.com/city-hall/departments/elk-city-museum-complex
- Oklahoma Route 66 Museum, Clinton. Noted architect and Clinton native Rand Elliott designed this museum, which draws more than 35,000 visitors a year with classic cars, a 1950s-era Valentine diner, and many more delightful and charming Mother Road exhibits. okhistory.org/sites/route66
- Route 66 Interpretive Center, Chandler. In an abandoned National Guard armory is a treasure trove of Mother Road postcards, old motel keys, road maps—and one of the best gift shops on the Route. route66interpretivecenter.org

A CENTURY OF AMERICA'S MAIN STREET

Route 66 is a perfect encapsulation of all the ways America changed in the twentieth century. This stretch of blacktop was the brainchild of an Oklahoman: Tulsa businessman Cyrus Avery, to be exact. Avery was a member of the federal board created to design the United States' new highway system, and he lobbied for a road connecting Chicago and Los Angeles—and he made sure it would pass through Oklahoma.

Thanks to Avery's efforts, Route 66 was commissioned in 1926 and paved over the next several years. It carried Dust Bowl migrants to California, as referenced in John Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath—in fact, it was Steinbeck who first called it the Mother Road. It inspired songs and a 1960s television show—not to mention the Pixar film Cars and its sequels—and carried millions of Americans on road trips in the years following World War II.

Once the Interstate Highway System was expanded to 41,000 miles in the 1950s, the Mother Road's fortunes began to decline. But small businesses, towns, cities, and supporters along the Route kept its spirit alive. As the twenty-first century dawned, renewed interest in the Mother Road took off, and now, Route 66 is a cultural juggernaut, supporting these same towns and businesses just the way they support it.

MOTORCYCLISTS

Driving Route 66 on two wheels is, for many, an American rite of passage. And the Mother Road and its people are friendly to motorcyclists. However, you'll want to keep an eye out for uneven or rough terrain, especially on older parts of the road, as some spots can be tough for motorcycle riders. Contact local authorities and the Oklahoma Department of Transportation (oklahoma.gov/odot) for information on road conditions in specific areas, or contact the Oklahoma Bikers Association at (405) 812-6224 or at facebook.com/oklahomabikersassociation. ELECTRIC VEHICLES

It is possible to drive the entire length of Route 66 in an electric vehicle—the trick is being prepared. Oklahoma's Route 66 EV infrastructure is very good, with multiple charging stations in many towns. Most of these are Tesla, Electrify America, Francis Energy, or ChargePoint brand chargers. Download the PlugShare app to find the ones you need, and try to stop where there are multiple chargers to ensure you find one that works and don't have to wait for others.

PIE TO THE SKY

CLANTON'S CAFE IN VINITA IS ONE OF THE OLDEST CONTINUOUSLY OPERATING RESTAURANTS ON OKLAHOMA'S MOTHER ROAD, AND THE FIFTH GENERATION IS PREPARING TO TAKE THE REINS.

BY NATHAN GUNTER

GUY FIERI WAS NOT IMPRESSED WITH calf fries.

This so very Okie-coded of dishes, something of a rite of passage for the gastronomically adventurous in the Sooner State, wasn't landing with the bleach-pated, backwards-sunglassed host of Diners, Drive-ins and Dives. Fieri was filming in Vinita at Clanton's Cafe—for nearly a century a staple of the state's Mother Road menu—and though he was digging what he was seeing and tasting, he wasn't into the calf fries, which, while beloved by some, are not known as residents of Flavortown.

"He said, 'This needs a sauce,'" says Dennis Patrick, who runs the place with his wife Melissa Clanton Patrick, great-granddaughter of the diner's founder. "So he got back there in the kitchen and started mixing some things up, and now, we serve our calf fries with Guy Sauce—it's the same thing he mixed up that day. He said, 'That's yours. You can have it.'"

That wasn't the only favor the show did this Mother Road institution. Dennis says the episode of Diners, Drive-ins and Dives Fieri shot that day re-airs every three or four months or so, and he sees a spike in sales each time. But Fieri isn't the only expert to weigh in: In between shots of celebrities who've dined here (Toby Keith! Chris LeDoux!), the walls of Clanton's are lined with framed articles from Garden & Gun, Gourmet, Southern Living, and many other magazines, newspapers, and TV spots.

OK, thinks the Mother Road wanderer: Doesn't every small town along Route 66 have a little diner that's widely beloved?

Simple answer: Not like this. While great eateries abound along the Route—especially in Oklahoma—few of them have had the staying power of Clanton's. Founded in Diners can get Clanton's famous chicken-fried steak in sandwich form as well as other classics like a Hot Hamburger.

Clanton's Cafe in Vinita first opened in 1927 as the Busy Bee and has been in its current location on Illinois Avenue since 1947.

Clanton's Cafe

Facebook: @clantonscafe

1927—Dennis says he's going to celebrate the centennial next year, because why not?—it moved to a few places around town before opening in its current location in 1947.

"Melissa's great-grandfather, Grant Clanton—they called him Sweet Tater—he was a potato farmer around the Dust Bowl times," Dennis says. "He came into town and started a little restaurant called the Busy Bee, and he'd get his soups and stews ready to go and go out on the street corner with a pot and bang the pot so they knew it was ready."

Melissa and Dennis are the fourth generation of Clanton kin to run this restaurant, and their sons Shaun and Michael can be seen working here most days in front of house and the kitchen. And the family vibe is felt in the food.

"It's always been your basic diner food—home cooking," Melissa says. "Chicken-fried steak is the most popular, and chicken and dressing is next to it. People are used to dressing at Thanksgiving, but we have it every day. And as my grandpa said, if nothing else sounds good, you order a burger."

Indeed, the chicken-fried steak is juicy, savory, and slathered in a rich white gravy (it's also a popular choice for breakfast). And that's only one of a selection of classic American dishes. The burgers are perfection, and that chicken-fried steak comes in sandwich form as well, but those seeking true satisfaction will want to find the section of the menu marked Favorites, as it's a litany of home-cooked goodness like pot roast, grilled pork chops, fried fish filets, and more. And while many of the menu items are the same as they've been for a century—in some cases, the recipes are unchanged—there are some twenty-first century evolutions as well—salmon, for instance.

"The chicken-fried steak hasn't changed; the chicken and dressing hasn't changed; the chili hasn't changed," Melissa says. "You have to continue to evolve with the times, so we've added to the menu as people's tastes have evolved."

But no matter whether their ultimate meal comes from the past or present, diners won't want to miss out on one of Clanton's most famous offerings: its pies. The mile-high meringues and whipped toppings always raise eyebrows whether they're atop coconut cream, chocolate, or lemon pie and homemade crust.

Just like the Route itself, Clanton's is both a wild adventure and a warm blanket of Americana travelers can wrap around themselves for a little while before continuing on down that Mother Road, taking comfort in the fact that when they return, it'll still be there. ■

TULSA

Route 66 was born in Tulsa—it was businessman Cyrus Avery, a Tulsan, who first conceived the idea of the Mother Road, and it's in Tulsa where the Route achieves its perfect form, with vintage neon, muffler folk, historic architecture, legendary food, and more authentic American culture than you'd think possible in just one city. But see for yourself: Tulsa is where Route 66's heart beats.

Art Deco skyscrapers, churches, and other architectural treasures frame the length of Boston Avenue in downtown Tulsa.

GOOD NIGHT

TULSA'S NOCHE SERVES ELEVATED MEXICAN FARE IN A FUN, APPROACHABLE WAY.

BY GREG ELWELL

CONSIDER THE HUMBLE CHEESE enchilada. It is a staple of Oklahoma's Mexican restaurants, almost like the California roll is to sushi. It's simple. It's satisfying. It's a classic. It also can be boring. Uninspired. Meh to the blah power.

"We're not trying to reinvent the wheel," says Marco Herrera, former executive operator of Noche Woodfired Grill & Agave Bar in Tulsa. "The guest wants what the guest wants, and we want to give them that, so we try to do the best versions of those things that we can."

Noche is neither a molecular gastronomy showcase nor a cookie-cutter Tex-Mex joint. Instead, the staff uses tried-and-true methods to help elevate beloved Mexican dishes without becoming unapproachable.

Noche's cheese enchilada is a triumph of technique and execution. It starts with a soft but pliant corn tortilla that's made in-house. Inside is a gooey, creamy filling of cheese that is pleasantly warm and deeply flavorful thanks to the inclusion of a nutty Parmesan crema and smoky onions. Ladled lovingly over the top is a guajillo-ancho chili sauce with a mild tinge of heat accenting the smoky sweetness of the peppers. This dish is a savory amusement park, and diners' tongues are in for a fun ride.

"If you want my pro move, cut it in half in the middle, and then take a bite from there," Herrera says.

All that cheesy goodness would still be good without the chili sauce, but together, they're magical. After the umami coats the taste buds, threatening to drown the palate in richness, the chili sauce creates a perfect counterbalance, deliciously wiping the slate clean for each new bite.

Those who arrive seeking Tex-Mex fare will not be disappointed, Herrera says. But beyond the enchiladas and fajitas everyone adores, the menu is something of a Mexican travelogue, touring diners through the southern reaches, the coastal towns, and the more cosmopolitan cuisine of Mexico City, home to one of the world's hottest food scenes.

Take, for instance, the tlayuda. Served almost like a pizza, it's a large, crisp tortilla crust topped with herbaceous chorizo verde, queso Oaxaca, and refried beans, which provide the dish's satisfying heft. Add salsa macha and cabbage for flavor and texture, and you've got something that's familiar enough to enjoy and novel enough to convince even the most die-hard Tex-Mex fan to explore the menu further.

If this were an SAT prep course, the Mayacoba beans that pepper the menu would be to pintos what Yukon Golds are to russet potatoes—buttery, creamy, and utterly satisfying. And where the beans are good, the rice must rise to meet it, and Noche's golden rice does just that. The individual grains do not clump together but provide a flavorful and fluffy base that is delicious on its own and even better when soaking up the other flavors in the dish.

Even if Noche were housed in a gray concrete box, it would still be a must-visit for diners, but its vibrant, funky interior and carefully chosen soundtrack are as welcoming as the menu.

As good as the dishes coming off the wood-fired grill are, the agave bar at Noche is just as impressive, featuring drinks for every variety of taste. Even better, the staff are experts who can educate and guide customers on their exploratory journey through the worlds of tequila, mezcal, sotol, and raicilla. They also serve a small selection of zero-proof cocktails, including a pistachio horchata.

While the team behind Noche is eager to expand the palates of Tulsa drinkers, the drink they sell the most of is the classic margarita. Herrera proudly proclaims Noche's is the best in Tulsa.

"Today, we'll probably touch close to 200 classic margaritas—250 if you include all the margaritas on the menu," he says. "I think it's the best in town, and I'm not afraid to say it. It's amazing." 🍹

SAPULPA'S TEEPEE DRIVE-IN IS BRINGING THE ACTION, ROMANCE, DRAMA, AND LAUGHS BACK TO ROUTE 66.

BY ABIGAIL SINGREY

WITH ITS TOWERING NEON SIGN along Route 66, it's obvious that the TeePee Drive-In in Sapulpa is iconic. But it's not just a cool spot to watch new and classic movies from the comfort of an automobile—it invites guests to relive the golden age of car travel. After folks finish their flick, they can spend a night in comfort in a restored 1950s Spartan trailer.

The drive-in first opened in 1950 then was abandoned in 1999. When the current owner, Joni Rogers-Kante, first toured it, the site was overgrown and desolate. The screen even had bullet holes in it. However, from her fond childhood memories of evenings spent at the TeePee, she had a vision of what it could become. After extensive renovations, the drive-in reopened in April 2023. Now, a new generation of Sapulpans and Route 66 travelers can make their own memories.

A night in one of the TeePee trailers is $116 to $200, and guests receive a free movie with their stay.

"It brings together all these aspects of Americana," former drive-in operations manager Chuck Foxen says. "It's a throwback to the classic car culture of Route 66."

Rogers-Kante not only wanted to restore the TeePee; she set out to expand the experience. She and her husband, Ben Kante, sourced twelve Spartan trailers and began the painstaking process of restoring them, which is challenging.

"They were dented up and rusted through in places," Rogers-Kante says. "Each one takes almost a year to strip down to the bare frame. There's a lot of bodywork. Everything has to be done by hand since they are so old."

After the bodywork on each trailer is complete, Rogers-Kante starts designing the interiors. Each one begins with a 1950s-era color as its inspiration. Rogers-Kante spent a lot of time researching retro patterns and fabrics to create an interior that feels authentic to the time period.

Playgrounds and picnic tables welcome movie-goers who need to get out and stretch their legs for a bit between bouts of action.

“I thought about the things my mom and grandma had in their kitchens,” Rogers-Kante says. “When I saw those things online, I had to have them.”

So far, she’s completed an orange-themed 1952 Royal Spartanette and a red-themed 1956 Spartan Imperial Mansion, with plans for mint green, pink, yellow, and more accommodations in the works.

The two fully restored trailers now are tucked away at the back of the property and available to rent on Airbnb.

Foxen has been surprised at the number of guests from far-flung locations, including a Japanese couple and a pair of newlyweds from Italy driving from Chicago to California for their honeymoon.

“Each had their unique way of finding the TeePee Drive-In, but everyone wanted the throwback Americana experience of a drive-in,” Foxen says.

A typical evening at the TeePee starts when the gates open two hours before dusk, and the movie begins once the sun has set. There’s plenty to do beforehand, however, as the theater has a climbing wall and playground perfect for families. Visitors also can challenge each other to games of cornhole and Connect Four. In addition, concessions and a bar cart provide refreshments such as hot dogs and popcorn, and fire pits are available for s’mores in cool weather.

“This place is magic,” Foxen says. “And when the sun sets, it really comes alive. You really can’t beat watching a film under the stars.” 🌟

WHERE THE NEW WILD THINGS ARE

GIRAFFES, HYENAS, ELANDS, AND MORE MAKE UP THE LARGEST EXPANSION EVER IN THE HISTORY OF THE OKLAHOMA CITY ZOO.

BY KIERSTEN STONE

THE OKLAHOMA CITY ZOO IS even bigger than that little menagerie in San Diego. In fact, it's home to more than three hundred species, and it inspires more than a million visitors each year to care about the creatures with which humans coexist.

It's hard to believe there's room for improvement. But after decades of work and planning, the zoo crew completed the largest habitat expansion in its history last spring with a ribbon cutting to celebrate on March 26, 2025.

Expedition Africa covers twelve acres on the west side of the park and hosts African animals of all kinds—more than sixty species and two hundred individual animals, in fact. About twenty-four of those species are brand new to the zoo, including dwarf mongoose, an Ethiopian mountain adder, and two honey badgers.

Though that last one may have a sweet name, these bold, weasel-like critters are so chaotic and destructive, the Zoo is one of only four accredited zoos in the country where they reside. Here, the staff occupies them with an enrichment program featuring a climbing structure. Between their gymnastics and their rarity, the honey badgers quickly are becoming popular—though they aren't the only new addition turning heads and capturing hearts.

“A staff favorite is the meerkats, because they just got here not that long ago, and everybody is just now getting a chance to really see them,” says Jennifer D’Agostino, the zoo’s director of veterinary services. “They’re constantly doing stuff, interacting with each other, and digging.”

Zoo staff also expanded their engagement opportunities. Visitors now can feed the giraffes year-round thanks to a new state-of-the-art barn. Lemur lovers can learn more about the primates during a Caretaker Chat, and the porcine-inclined can have a Wild Encounter with a Red River hog in Expedition Africa.

Several animals reside behind glass in the restrooms in the renovated Love’s Pachyderm Building, including a Madagascar giant hognose snake in the women’s room and an ocellated skink in the men’s room. And the four-foot-long dwarf crocodile delights kids by coming nose to nose with them behind his glass tank. (And Zoo visitors also can opt to stay overnight in Expedition Africa’s new Baobab Lodge.) Outside, among the many new enclosures are two multispecies savanna habitats. One will be home to the growing giraffe herd and ostriches, as well as Nile lechwe and common eland—a type of antelope—while the other will shelter zebras and wildebeests.

Zoogoers won’t be the only ones observing the Savanna Overlook. One of the walkways runs between the savanna and the back of the African lion exhibit, where the cats like to lay, pace, and enjoy their new view.

“It’s really fun to observe, because the cats also have a direct line of sight to the giraffes, especially that baby giraffe,” D’Agostino says. “They really, really like the baby giraffe. They’re always on the hill staring at it.”

Animal enrichment is a big part of the zoo’s overall mission, and Expedition Africa was designed with that in mind. The giraffe exhibit incorporates unique feeders, where the ungulates have to use their long tongues to get food as they would in the wild. For the carnivores like African painted dogs, the habitat has a zipline where carcasses slide down, allowing the pack animals to exercise their wild instincts to work as a team.

SAXON SMITH

SAXON SMITH

Expedition Africa, the renovations to the Love’s Pachyderm Building, and related improvements cost about $35 million.

Everything from enrichment opportunities to the habitat layouts was carefully designed to make everyone’s experience—including the animals’—good.

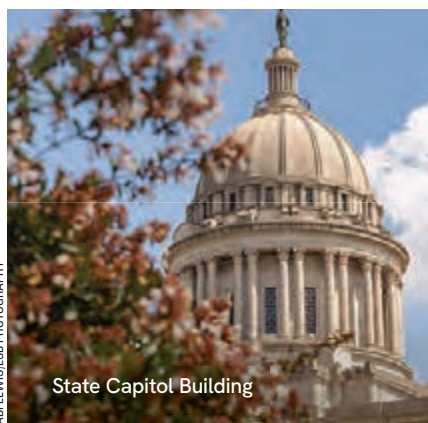

“We don’t only have the best zoo around, but one of the best zoos in America,” Oklahoma City Mayor David Holt said at the Expedition Africa opening. “Every few years, we get to cut the ribbon on something pretty spectacular, and this certainly meets that standard.” ■

THE HERITAGE EXPRESS TROLLEY AND CANADIAN COUNTY HISTORICAL MUSEUM ARE TICKETS TO THE PAST.

BY KAITLYN WELDON

NOW KNOWN FOR DELICIOUS onion burgers and the giant annual celebration thereof every spring, El Reno is a town with a rich heritage that began when the Darlington Agency first established a camp at Fort Reno in 1874. Naturally, a town that is older than the state itself is teeming with fascinating stories around every corner, but the Canadian County Historical Museum is practically filled to the rafters with the tales of those who made this town what it is today.

Museum director Vicki Proctor's father was a founding member.

"I was raised at the museum," she says. "My passion is to keep the museum going."

To that end, Proctor has been the organization's president for more than thirty-five years. Aside from Proctor and the other board members, a group of twenty-one dedicated volunteers keep the museum running and give tours—which are chock-full of interesting stops. There's the original Rock Island Depot, where visitors can learn about how the railroad helped put the town on the map. The Red Cross built its first canteen in the United States in a log cabin here in 1918. Though the paint is peeling, the Possum Holler one-room schoolhouse conjures images of kids riding horses to school and lugging along their lunches in syrup buckets. History buffs also might be interested in General Sheridan's former headquarters—the oldest standing structure in the county—and the petrified tree, which is even older (by at least a million years or so).

Many people love the old El Reno Hotel, which opened its doors to the public in 1892 and served travelers for more than eighty years until closing in 1974. The final owner, Catherine Lemon, insisted on caring for the aging building until it was moved to the museum grounds in 1984.

Though folks still can visit the museum, they'll have to head to downtown El Reno to enjoy the Heritage Express Trolley in December.

Proctor says the museum has become like a community in and of itself. That might be because the locals happily donate items to promote the preservation of their own historic pasts.

"We hardly have an archive, because we try to display everything donated to us," Proctor says. "Each item has a description and tag with the donor's name on it."

Just when visitors think the tour is finished, a jolly shout of "All aboard!" lets them know it's time to catch a ride on the Heritage Express Trolley. Reaching into their pockets to pull out their ticket to ride might feel a little like Charlie Bucket entering Willy Wonka's factory. A window seat on the trolley affords riders a view of the city while the conductor wows the audience with tales from a bygone era highlighting the history of El Reno.

But the trolley doesn't just travel to the past. Those who've seen Twisters might recognize it, since a replica of it appears in the movie. The Twisters crew measured the trolley, took photos from all angles, and worked meticulously to recreate this local treasure until the wee hours of the morning, according to Proctor. Though the scene is brief, it has brought extra tourism to the community.

No matter where the Heritage Express Trolley, the Canadian County Historical Museum, or even the town of El Reno go next, it's safe to say Proctor and her team of passionate historians at the Canadian County Historical Museum will be protecting the past and all of its fascinating stories. ■
